Description: The parking lot at the end of the valley in Hüttschlag is the starting point of our tour. First, we need to overcome the steep forest behind Stockhamhof. Afterward, the path becomes flatter, leading past a chapel to the Kreealmen. From here, the trail continues uphill through a larch forest and pine growth to the forest limit. Here, we follow a trail that takes us over an exposed ridge to the ruins of the abandoned Schöderwacht. The impressive panoramic view even allows glimpses of the periodic Schödersee, Marchkar, and Brunnkar. At certain points, the pine growth needs to be climbed over.

Upon reaching the Little Mureck, the view opens up to the Lungau part of the National Park. At the distinctive summit cross, we enjoy the panoramic view in all directions. The White Peak in the east and the Keeskogel in the west are particularly impressive. Following a specially located spring stream with mosses, we descend back to the Murtörl. After a last look towards the crumbling Schöderwacht, we descend again at the foot of the Murwand. On the way back, just before reaching the parking lot, we make a detour to the Kreealm waterfall, beautifully illuminated by the afternoon sun.
